About Watercolor Pencils, Markers, and Crayons...

Each one has a different personality and each brand brings its own flavor.

Here's a brief overview with suggested brands. I'll also bring a variety of these tools to class that you're welcome to try out. They're all wonderful, whatever you choose!

Pencil - More control than a crayon, can leave some texture behind once water is added. | Suggested WC Pencil Brands - Derwent, Faber-Castell

Markers - Less textural, bright and clear, doesn't change with variations in pressure so less of a physical/tactile experience to work with, looks the most like watercolor once water is added. | Suggested WC Marker Brands - Faber-Castell (dual tip), Ecoline (refillable, markers match Ecoline's liquid watercolors)

Crayon - wonderful for gestural mark making, clear and bright, less control and precision, responds to changes in pressure, may leave texture behind after wetted. |

Suggested WC Crayon Brand - Neocolor Watersoluble (Neocolor also makes a non-water soluble crayon, so make sure you get the ones that say water soluble)

In case you want a fourth option or you already have these, the Derwent Inktense Blocks are also great. These act and feel like a hard pastel, respond well to pressure changes, good for gestural marks, and are loaded with pigment (i.e. a little goes a long way). The colors tend to be less clear and bright than the Neocolor crayons.
