Oh my gosh, where does the time go? It seems like it moves faster as each day goes by.

Since we moved two years ago, I have been in a slump as far as wanting to sew. Do you ever get that way? Well, I think I'm getting back in the swing again.

The last two months, I have been sewing and working on two new patterns. It takes a lot of time for me to do a new sample for a pattern. I'm taking a lot of notes and pictures for each step in the pattern as I'm making a sample. If you have used one of my patterns, you know I use a lot of pictures. The first one is a wall hanging called "Let's Build a Snowman". This one is one that has been in my head for several years. I wanted to use a snowflake made of snowmen. I finally got it drawn so I was ready to go. It's hard to tell in the photo, but the big snowflake is snowmen. (48" x 48")

The second quilt is called "Directionally Challenged". (62" x 62")

I saw a similar block on a calendar, and it intrigued me. I have a sister and friend who are always saying they are directionally challenged. They were the inspiration for the name of the quilt. See, ideas can come from anywhere.

What's New!

My website has a new, fresher look. I hope you like it. It works better on mobile devices than the old format. It's actually an upgrade.

There's a lot of new fabric too. It seemed like the UPS truck was coming every day. I even had to buy another bookcase to have room for all the new bolts.
