

Two Color Binding Tutorial

Cut your binding strips for the back side  $1 \frac{7}{8}$ ".
Cut enough of them to go all the way around your quilt and join them as you usually do.

Cut your binding strips for the front 1" wide.
Cut enough of them to go all the way around your quilt and join them as you usually do.

Once you have all your strips joined to form one really long strip of each color then you need to sew those strips together like this.

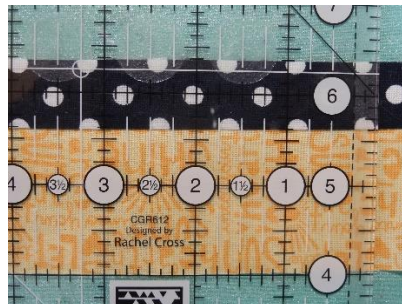

I trimmed the end off of the place where I would begin.

I pressed to the dark side of the binding.

My binding width was  $2 \frac{3}{8}$ " at this point when I measured it.

Just as you would for regular double fold binding you will press your strip wrong sides together to form your double fold binding.

Place the binding as you usually do with the raw edges of the binding to the raw edges of the quilt.

Make sure that the front color (in my case the navy) is right sides to the front of the quilt.

What you will see when you do this is just the back side of the binding.

I was skeptical that this was going to work but it does.

Attach the binding using 1/4" seam allowance

After it is attached you can see when I push it back, as if to turn it to the back, the navy really is on the front.

I usually press the binding away from the quilt at this point.

It seems to make things easier when I turn the binding to the back for the hand stitching part.

I was shocked to find that it really did work and the binding was actually really easy to prepare, attach and turn. Handstitch binding in place

Hope you enjoyed this mystery!
