POLYESTER THREAD

(WE NOW CARRY POLYESTER THREAD!)A message from Jessica:

What a gorgeous Sunday evening! As I write this Gerry is out flipping the burgers on the grill and they smell so yummy!

It's hard to believe tomorrow is the last day in August and kids are back to school! I have to admit we aren't quite ready to start thinking about the weather changing but all this rain we got today the last few days has been really nice! My yard and flowers are loving it!

This newsletter is jam packed with new classes and fabrics which I hope you all love!

This summer, we had a customer visit us and recite a poem he wrote. I loved it so much, I asked if I could share it with you all. Thank you so much David Kragnes for letting me share! I hope you all enjoy it as much as I did! Please find it below.

Be Inspired Everyday!Happy Sewing!

All Minutes Are Not Created Equal

I'm sitting at a quilt shop,
Waiting for my wife.
I don't think I've been here yet
For more than half my life.

This stop seems a little longer
Than the one we made before,
Even though I'm sure it's only been
One or two days more.

It's fun to watch the seasons change,
To watch the flowers grow,
Soon the pumpkins will come down
And Christmas lights will glow.

But I sit here patiently,
As she fingers every swatch,
It's good I brought along an extra
Battery for my watch.

I brought along some book work,
I finished up my tax,
I'll still make the deadline,
If I send it off by fax.

I'm sure there is some merchandise
She's never seen before,
Even though to me it looks,
Like every other store.

I know it's more than shopping,
That comes into the mix.
It's more than fingering every bolt,
To get a cotton fix.

She likes to meet with other gals,
Who share the same affliction,
Except that this group therapy,
Helps promote addiction.

Here she comes with half a bolt
And an extra quarter,
A roller cutter, yellow thread,
And piping for a border.

I help her load her packages,
I ask if she had fun.
I say that we should head for home,
If she's sure she is done.

But just because it's on the way,

Let's hit the Harley store.
I'm sure that it will only take,
A couple minutes more.
