The case for growing nectar-rich plants in your garden this spring

From The Optimist Daily

"The nectar created by flowering plants is a significant food source for many of the critters we share our environment with. Those of us who want to attract wildlife to our gardens understand the importance of having flowering plants in bloom for as long as possible.

Selecting nectar-rich plants is also a good idea because it can help us provide for insects, other pollinators, and predatory insects where we reside. These choices also assist us in providing for ourselves and our families."

Inspiration

Floral Coasters

April showers bring May flowers. And so do Janome.com and Janome Maker, Trish from Trish Stitched. Here's what she says:

"Have you ever come across a beautiful large print fabric that you wanted to see every day? That's how I felt when I first saw this fabric! After some project planning (and drinking many cups of tea), it dawned on me that these flowers could perfectly fit my tea cup! With some cutting, a little sewing, and a bit of detailed stitching, these coasters sit happily in my sewing space! Below are steps to create your own coasters!"
