World's First Vaccine for Declining Honeybees Approved By the US for Conditional Use

From the Good News Network:

"A biotech company announced this week that the USDA (Department of Agriculture) granted them a conditional license for their honeybee vaccine.

The vaccine boosts the bee's immune system to fight against American Foulbrood disease, a bacteria-based condition known to attack colonies that is caused by Paenibacillus larvae.

Critical to our food supplies, honeybees have been plagued by American Foulbrood, which until now had no safe or sustainable antidote. Previously, the only treatment method for the highly contagious disease was incinerating the bees, infected hives, and all the equipment."

Good reason to celebrate on National Honey Bee Day!

Paper Pieced Bee Blocks Come Together in a Springy Table Runner

This Sulky project by Ashley Hough is perfect for National Honey Bee Day! Here's what she has to say:

"Create a springy placemat set featuring foundation paper pieced bee blocks that come together like a "quilting bee" on your table. Print the paper pieced bee patterns onto Sulky Paper Solvy, a water-soluble paper that is easily sewn through and removes completely without the need to tear away pesky bits after piecing. Moisten a cotton swab and run it along seamlines to lift away the paper sections carefully and accurately. Or leave the paper intact until the placemat is complete; then, wash it away in a rinse and spin cycle in your washing machine."
